

Innovative Service Rates Both Stocks and Investors

Motley Fool Introduces Ratings Game

The Motley Fool is a multimedia financial services company focusing on stocks, investing and personal finance that is dedicated to building a powerful investment community. When The Motley Fool decided to launch a new service dubbed Motley Fool CAPS, the company selected Interactive DataSM to help build a web site for the service. Motley Fool CAPS monitors the predictions of stock pickers from among the community's members and ranks the most successful based on their recommendations. The service is designed to help identify the best investors as well as the best stocks and the best times to buy them.

In tackling the project, the biggest challenge for The Motley Fool was to create a web site that would integrate its own proprietary data with additional licensed content sets. The Motley Fool was also looking for a partner that would work with their company to develop tools and services designed to meet the needs of its customers. After collaborating on these and other ideas with Interactive Data, The Motley Fool selected them to help build the interactive portal site.

The new site allows members to offer predictions as to whether stocks will outperform or underperform the S&P 500 within a predetermined timeframe. Once members have provided their ratings, The Motley Fool then evaluates each member's predictions and an 'accuracy percentage' and 'score' is given which determines each member's overall CAPS ratings. The stocks also receive CAPS ratings indicating members' predictions relative to the S&P 500.

Interactive Data managed the integration and implementation of all data sets and provided a suite of content and tools, including charts, quotes, SEC filings,

Benefits of this web-based solution

- Complete aggregation and implementation of all data sets
- Collaborative development of tools and services for target audience
- Hosted content suite that supports and facilitates end-user decisions
